Commissioner for Patents

The reply brief filed 6/13/08 has been noted.

The examiner has read through the reply brief and has a different interpretation of the prior art and the claim language. With regards to Moon et al. USPN 6,211,858, the examiner interprets the meters as small applications as disclosed by Moon et al. in column 2, lines 30-50, which could be programmable options or any small application that are used in microprocessors, since Moon et al. also discloses using windows or similar computer programming software (column 1). Therefore the examiner maintains his rejection based on the interpretations of the claims and the prior art as previously stated in the last office action and the examiner answer.
